

Sad Case of Coronet a Magazine That Should Know Better

Today's Quotation

I remember when our whole island (Britain) was shaken with an earthquake some years ago, there was an impudent mountebank who sold pills, which, as he told the country people, were very good against an earthquake.

—Joseph Addison

If there's one job that amounts to a newspaper's sacred trust it is the business of cutting political pookum out of the public record. For if the people are truthfully informed about their public servants they will always manage to separate the boys from the men.

Yesterday a couple of press sheets hit The Star office, which, after a cursory examination by Managing Editor Paul Jones and myself, were discovered to be advance copy on an article, "Is Dixie Leaving the North Behind?" in the July issue of Coronet magazine. Well, anything favorable to the South is required reading; and we got along with this piece all right until Author Norman Carlisle blew a fuse and ruined everything in the closing paragraphs.

Remember, this is a national magazine, discussing the economic growth of the South; and do you know that in all the South Coronet magazine could find only one politician mentioning by name Governor McMath?

I am quoting a couple of gems from the Coronet piece, which is fair editorial comment; national magazines don't clear such copy without the consent of the officeholder, and so the following Coronet "quote" is what McMath is peddling outside the state in which he's running for a third term:

"Arkansas is a typical example of the South's great development in education. A couple of years ago, this state was spending about half the national average per pupil, and 100,000 of its young people had no accredited schools available."

Governor McMath and the people of Arkansas embarked on a campaign to change things. A Southerner, Mr. A. B. Bonds, was induced to give up his job with the AEC (Atomic Energy Commission) and become commissioner of education for Arkansas. An education caravan of 30 buses and 15 trucks was organized to travel the state, loaded with eye-opening samples of new school equipment. Voters had a chance to look at modern lighting, new desks, motion-picture equipment for visual education.

By last year, school expenditures jumped enough to provide more schools. Boosts in teachers' salaries, and bond issues of millions of dollars for construction and repair of buildings are further indications of Arkansas' determination to get its schools up to top standards. "And then go beyond that," says Mr. Bonds enthusiastically.

Incautious Coronet swallowed something, didn't it? Back home in Arkansas we tell the story a little differently. We weren't exactly bare-footed when Dix McMath went into the governor's office, although there are those who say we stand a good chance of being bare-footed if he stays there another term. We don't mind a guy pumping himself up personally in the log-cabin-to-riches tradition, but no state likes to see itself made ridiculous — and that's Arkansas' life-size picture in July Coronet.

Back home we know all about Dr. Bonds' "education tour." Movie machines that year — and next year the state discovered it wasn't going to be able to pay the teachers.

Remember how the state got out of that jam? Sure. It turned the schools back to their home districts. And then the districts got out and raised the money and paid the teachers.

No Let Up in Heat for State Within 5 Days

By The Associated Press
The U. S. Weather Bureau forecasts no let up in Arkansas' heat wave and drought for the next five days. The extended forecast for that period calls for temperatures 4 to 8 degrees above normal.

Little or no precipitation is forecast for the period through Wednesday of next week. The outlook for today and Friday is no change in temperatures with clear to partly cloudy skies. Ozark was the hottest spot in the state yesterday with 104 degrees.

Other maximums included Morrilton and Flippin 102; Arkadelphia and Gilbert 101; Batesville, Dardanelle, Ft. Smith and Walnut Ridge 100; Newport 99; Little Rock and Pine Bluff 98; Fayetteville and Camden 96; El Dorado and Texarkana 95.

By The Associated Press
Refreshing breezes from Canada cooled off some areas in the nation's sun-baked eastern half of the country today. But for millions in the East and South there appeared no quick end of the early summer heat wave.

The death toll from the record-breaking hot spell in the last two days mounted to 44. Thousands of persons suffered heat prostrations. The prolonged hot weather in the South increased the threat of severe damage to crops.

Temperatures were generally around the 100-degree mark again yesterday in most of the vast area hit by June's oppressive weather. All-time high records for the date and for June were toppled in many cities.

But the cool air which earlier moved across the Canadian border to the Northern Plains pushed southward yesterday across the Great Lakes region and into parts of Indiana, Illinois and Ohio. Temperatures in the 90s for three days, dropped as much as 20 degrees.

There also was some cooling in parts of New England and Eastern New York State. Labor Seeks Minimum Pay Increase

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Labor will probably press for a platform plank of a $1.25 hourly national minimum wage from both major parties, a union leader believes.

Methodists to Hear HSTC Head, Judge Pilkinton

Dr. D. D. McBrien, president of Henderson State Teachers College, will be guest speaker at First Methodist Church at the regular Sunday morning service and Judge James H. Pilkinton will speak Sunday night at 7:30.

The guest speakers will fill in for Rev. Virgil Koeley, pastor, who is attending a Methodist conference at Wichita, Kansas. James H. Jones, chairman of the Board of Stewards, will be in charge of the morning service and Albert Graves, general superintendent of the Sunday School, will direct the night service.

J. I. Liebong will teach the Century Bible class.

Kefauver Sees Opportunity for South

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — Sen. Estes Kefauver, bidding for support from the Arkansas Democratic delegation, says that "for the first time in 100 years there's an opportunity for a Southerner to be president."

Kefauver, in a brief visit here yesterday, also said he didn't believe either President Truman or Gov. Adlai Stevenson of Illinois, was interested in being drafted for the nomination.

A front-runner for the nomination in committed delegate support the Tennessee senator apparently was unaware of Gov. Stevenson's remark earlier yesterday that "it remains to be seen" whether he would accept the Democratic nomination.

Kefauver said that "the President likes some of the other candidates better than he does me."

Kefauver, in an address at a buffet supper for the Arkansas delegation committed to support Sen. J. William Fulbright of Arkansas — as long as he is in the running — also said he opposed removal of price and wage controls; opposed the Brannan Farm plan, but advocated continuation of the agricultural price support program, and opposed a "quit-claim deed to the states" in the matter of tidal and oil rights.

Acheson Will Have to Explain British Apology

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Acheson is going to have to do some explaining to Congress about his reported apology to Britain for not telling that country in advance of the American bombing of North Korean power stations.

Sen. Bridges (R-N.H.) told the Senate yesterday the apology—if made—was "a shocking thing."

And Sen. Knowland (R-Calif.), who brought the matter to the Senate's attention by reading a London news report about it, demanded that a full text of Acheson's remarks be made available to Congress.

Knowland said if Britain wants a bigger voice in the conduct of the Korean War, he would have no objection provided the British assumed a larger share of the burden.

The London account said Acheson reportedly made the apology to about 200 members representing both Houses of Parliament during a 20-minute meeting yesterday.

Acheson was reported to have told them American officials had intended to notify the British defense minister, Field Marshal Lord Alexander, and Selwyn Lloyd, British minister of state for foreign affairs, who arrived in Washington last Saturday.

But, he is reported to have explained, due to a mixup over whether a State or Defense Department official was to make the notification neither was informed.

Further complicating the picture, the State Department said only last Wednesday the British were not informed in advance because the raid was within the scope of military action which could be taken by the United States without consulting its allies.

MOP Freight Loses Part of Cars Near Hope Yard Limits

A Missouri Pacific freight train lost about forty of its 125 car load near the Hope city limits this morning and got all the way to Emmet before it was discovered.

A coupling break caused the accident. At Emmet the engineer sidetracked its remaining cars and came back to Hope for the rest of the load.

Fighter Bombers Strike Again at Electric Plants

SEOUL, Korea, (AP)—Allied fighter bombers, heaped new destruction on Communist hydro-electric plants in North Korea last night. Targets included two big generating stations which previously had been spared.

U.N. infantrymen drove two Chinese battalions off two hills on the Western Front Thursday. At times using bayonets and flame throwers to rout the Reds from their bunkers.

A Fifth Air Force spokesman called the 150-plane raid on the Communists' North Korean power network a mopping up operation, but the number of planes involved and damage reported by returning pilots were impressive.

500 to Attend VFW Convention

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — More than 500 delegates to the 21st annual encampment of the Arkansas Veterans of Foreign Wars were expected here today.

The morning session will be addressed by James W. Cotheran of Bishopville, S. C., national service commander-in-chief.

Another Riot Breaks Out in Kentucky Prison

Edyville, Ky. (AP)—A fresh riot broke out at the state prison today and state police in nightfield described it as "bloodier than yesterday" when eight convicts and a guard were injured.

First reports said several prisoners had been injured in the new outbreak, which came hardly 12 hours after 300 prisoners ended a day-long rebellion.

Miss Arkansas Title Goes to Spa Girl

NEWPORT, Ark. (AP) — A 20-year-old brunette from Hot Springs, Miss Bonnie Nickels, will represent the state at the Miss Arkansas contest in Atlantic City, N. J., as Miss Arkansas.

She was chosen Miss Arkansas here last night in the finals of the annual beauty pageant after singing and dancing a chorus-girl novelty number. She also answered impromptu questions concerning world peace, "party" rules, and juvenile delinquency to best four other finalists.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Paul Nickels of Hot Springs, "Miss Arkansas" is 5 feet, 4½ inches tall, weighs 115 pounds, has a 35 inch bust, 24½ inch waist and 35 inch hips.

Miss Batesville placed second in the final ratings, Miss University of Arkansas, third; Miss Wynne, fourth, and Miss Little Rock, fifth.

The new Miss Arkansas was chosen from an original field of 30 contestants after two days of strenuous competition. She was crowned by Gov. McMath and last year's Miss Arkansas Charlotte Simmen of Little Rock.

A buzzard trap works for Lee Norton of Route 4 Hope. In one day 32 buzzards were caught. The trap plan, a simple one, was provided by the Rodent Control Section of the Department of Interior through county agent Oliver L. Adams.

The buzzards were damaging newly born calves on the Norton farm. Buzzard damage to young calves has been reported to the county agent by several livestock producers recently. Livestock owners interested in buzzard control are asked to contact Mr. Norton or the county agent.

Tackett Pulls Big Crowd at Address Here

By The Associated Press
Atty. Gen. Lee Murry says that he won't promise to double "old-age pensions, teachers' salaries or roads" in order to be elected governor, but he will promise an honest administration.

Speaking at the annual Turtle Derby Day at Gould, Ark., yesterday, Murry referred to only one of his five opponents for the Democratic nomination — Gov. McMath. He repeated his earlier charges that the incumbent did not have the experience for the position. McMath is seeking a third term as governor.

Jeff Speck of Frenchman's Bayou Ark., the Republican candidate for governor, also spoke at the Derby festivities yesterday pointing to the sudden surge of presidential aspirants to Arkansas as a need for a 2-party system.

He said that presidential candidates didn't "bother with Arkansas until they feared the uprising of a 2-party system."

Sen. Estes Kefauver visited Arkansas yesterday. Averett Harriman stopped in the state last week and Sen. Robert Kerr of Oklahoma is scheduled to arrive Monday. GOP candidate Sen. Robert Taft made the keynote address at the Republican State Convention in April.

Rep. Boyd Tackett of Nashville, filled his 121st speech since the closing of the Democratic ticket with condemnation of Gov. McMath. Speaking at Hope, he said that the only people who support the governor were those "who expected to get something out of it."

Some 300 Brave Heat, Attend Study Day

Visitors at the annual Study Day at the Fruit and Truck Branch Experiment Station, here, today saw for themselves what a difference supplemental irrigation can make. They also learned that even last year, when the weather in general was favorable, irrigation applied when needed increased the yields of sweet potatoes.

A popular stop on the morning tour of the experimental area was that on supplemental irrigation. Here associate professor John Bowers of the University's horticulture department, R. H. Benedict, assistant professor of agricultural engineering, and James L. Gantt, Extension agricultural engineer, discussed the advantages of irrigation and the research work under way at the station.

Sweet potatoes, cucumbers, fall snap beans, and cabbage and broccoli are all being irrigated this year.

Last year, in the sweet potato variety trials, six applications of water were needed during the season to keep available soil moisture at the 45 per cent level. Dr. Bowers told the visitors. Most of the eight varieties grown in the test, including Unit 1 and a new variety Gold Rush, responded by producing almost twice as many bushels of No. 2 potatoes as did non-irrigated plots. The first application of water was made on June 30. This year, plots have already been watered three times to keep sufficient moisture in the soil, Mr. Benedict reported.

The moisture level in the soil is read on a special water meter, and whenever the level drops below a certain point irrigation is used, Mr. Benedict stated. Two different levels are being used in this year's work: 20 per cent and 50 per cent. In another experiment in 1951, using the variety Allgood, yields of U. S. No. 1's and No. 2's were both increased by more than 100 bushels per acre when the moisture level was kept at 20 per cent. Both irrigated and non-irrigated plots were fertilized with 200 pounds of 5-10-5 per acre. At that rate of fertilization, increasing the moisture level to 50 per cent did not further increase yields.

About 300 men and women from southwestern Arkansas attended the event. During the morning, in addition to the stop on irrigation, they learned about research on truck crops from Dr. V. M. Watte, head of the University's horticulture and forestry department; the value of fescue as a winter pasture, discussed by Dr. P. C. Sandall, assistant professor of agronomy, and W. H. Froydenes, Extension agronomist; the work being done in forestry research, explained by associate professor of forestry F. M. Meade; and a discussion of peach varieties by Earl J. Allen, Extension horticulturist.

On the afternoon program, Professor Dwight Isely, associate director of the Arkansas Agricultural Experiment Station, pointed out the importance of "horticultural crops in the state. Total production of these crops equals that of rice and exceeds soybeans, he reported. The high standard of living in the United States depends in part on the variety of foods available, and the fruit and truck crop commodities are the most important to the state. Also on the afternoon program were discussions of "The Future of Arkansas by Raymond E. McMath, fishery biologist, and Gene McMath, a talk on a sanitary fertilizer supply by Gene McMath, Extension horticulturist.

Parcel Post Rate Increase Is Sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — Postmaster General Donaldson asked the Interstate Commerce Commission today to grant another general advance in parcel post rates.

The petition did not say just how much increase will be asked. It said merely that fourth class mail service or parcel post — is not paying its way, despite a general 25 per cent increase in parcel post rates granted by the commission last year. The higher rates became effective last Oct. 1.

Many Problems Simply Being a 'Teenager - Many Grownups Would Like to Have Them

By HAL BOYLE
DENVER (AP)—There is a girl here I have known since her birth and she was so small then that her mother now tells her: "I could put you in a teacup the day you were born."

But now she is a tall, pretty, dark-haired young lady who has reached the treacherous teens. What is it like to be a teenager? I asked her.

"I'll tell you—if you don't use my real name," she said. "Call me June Badger—that is my favorite imaginary name. I really isn't so hot either."

June also brought up the fact many parents don't realize the importance of telephones to teenagers.

Nearly 24,000 auto workers in Detroit plants were made idle by heat strikes yesterday—the third day of walkouts caused by temperatures around the 100 mark.

Two Springfield, Ill., laborers loaded a truck with bags of insecticide then complained about the heat. Their foreman sent them home. Less than four hours later both men died in a hospital. Doctors said they would investigate to determine if fumes from the chemical were a factor in the deaths.

George Eleff's idea of cooling off was to take a ride in his car. He took along his year old pet monkey, Sam. The monkey made it hotter for Eleff when he leaped onto the steering wheel and promptly crashed into a railroad viaduct in Joliet, Ill. Eleff told Police Magistrate Martin Jackson it was an error in judgment to let the monkey drive his car. The magistrate called it disorderly conduct and fined Eleff $10.

Narrows Lake Road to Be Open Saturday

Swaha lodge and the picnic grounds-beach area at the Narrows lake dam will be accessible to the public this week-end, The Star learned today.

Tex Flagg, lodge operator, said Dave Parsons, reservoir manager, assured him this morning the federal access roads which are being paved will be reopened Saturday.

The Corps of Engineers closed the dam area the early part of this week in order to blacktop the steep highway which rises from the county road at river level to the top of the dam. Paving is carried all the way to the beach, on one spur, and to the lodge, on another road link. Connecting roads leading to the home sites on Cowhide Cove are being paved.

Record Heat Blankets Half of Nation

By The Associated Press
June's blazing heat kept up its relentless siege over wide areas in the Eastern half of the nation today.

Wednesday was the summer season's hottest day in hundreds of cities in the heat-stricken region. Temperatures soared into the 90s and above 100 in the East, the South and the Midwest. Records for the date were broken in scores of cities.

No immediate, widespread relief appeared in sight. However, some of the cooler air which covered the Northern Plains states was headed into the North Central states. There was a promise of some cooling by Friday. No such relief was forecast for Eastern and Southern hot spots.

Hot dry weather threatened crops in some Southern states, including Virginia and Arkansas. Deaths from heat were reported in several cities. Hundreds suffered heat prostration.

Baltimore reported 99 heat prostrations and one death from the 99-degree heat. It was the hottest June 25 in 54 years. In nearby Washington, the mercury hit 98 for a season's high and the hottest June 25 since 1875.

Three deaths attributed to the heat were reported in Ohio, which sweltered in temperatures around the 100.

Two persons died from heat in Philadelphia and 40 were treated in hospitals for heat exhaustion. The day's top reading of 96 was a record for the date.

New York City reported a record 96.5 reading. More than a thousand persons were treated for heat prostration. One death was reported in Upstate New York, where temperatures were in the 90s.

Readings of 100 and above were general in many parts of the South. The day's top of 104 at Macon, Ga., marked the fifth consecutive day of 100 or higher and the 25th straight day with temperatures above 90. It was 103 in Augusta and 101 in Savannah. The 101 in Nashville was a record for the date while Chattanooga's 102 tied the all-time high for June.

New records for June 25 were set in several Virginia cities, including Newport News with 102 and Richmond and Norfolk with 100. Texas baked, with a top of 100 at Presidio.

St. Louis was promised no relief after yesterday's sizzling 100-degree heat which set a new June 25 record.

As you are...

Whether you like it or not, Kitten, this is yourself... just as you are. The mirror is true. It neither flatters, nor fails to do you justice. It is good to know the facts.

The Apostle Paul said that men are disposed to look into a mirror, and immediately forget what manner of men they are. One needs often to look at himself, to remember his condition. The Springtime of the Soul is called Lent. During the weeks leading up to Easter, we are asked to let our consciences reveal to us just how noble we are living. They who accept the challenge of Lent will take time to pray and to attend the Church, so they may know where they stand.

We have the glorious opportunity of accepting human and divine help, that we shall become better than we are. In fact, the whole purpose of education, patriotism, and religion is to make us better. We can improve. Tomorrow we can be better than today... it is God's gift.

The BOOK of the CRIME

CHAPTER THIRTY

"AND when," asked Mr. Dabney, his eyes on the catalogue in Gamadge's hands, "are we to have that statement from you?"

"I haven't made it to anybody else," said Gamadge, "you're the first to hear it." He looked at Serena and smiled. "Two thin books, much of a size; one a report of a trial, the other the judge's summing-up; they were fastened together, you know, they belonged to each other. And the summing-up was printed in two columns in fine type—plenty of reading matter there."

Mr. Dabney wrinkled up his forehead, and Gamadge laughed. "I was puzzled too," he said. "Yes, it puzzles me; but I can't quite—"

"Nor could I. And I couldn't even decide what was puzzling me. Because of the old books only one of them seemed to stir a memory, and that wasn't the trial but the other. And it wasn't so much what was in the other, as what its format was. That's as near as I could get."

Mr. Dabney, his eyes fastened on Gamadge, shook his head. "A week ago yesterday," said Gamadge, "Miss Austen honored me by calling. Quite naturally, they all wanted to know how the police were getting along with their investigation of the murder, and wanted also to know how hard the police might work on it. She lamented the vulgarity of the press, she said that if the boy had been important there would have been columns and columns about him; and added (her mind on hazardous publicity): 'Far too much.'"

"They do far too much," was her thought. But what registered itself in my brain was first the columns and columns of fine print in that summing-up, and then the thought that compared with the trial, any trial, the summing-up was too long; far too long, longer than—"

Mr. Dabney put up a hand: "Wait. No. Yes. No."

"Well, you're a lawyer," said Gamadge, "but this case was tried, and another case was tried and summed up, many years ago. I'm a book man in an amateur kind of way; I see and handle and read about all kinds of books, and my interest in trials is you might say a reader's interest. Miss Austen unlocked a compartment in my brain which held the memory of the longest summing-up in legal history. There was a celebrated case—only it wasn't a murder case; there was as a result a trial for perjury; and the summing-up of that trial—"

Mr. Dabney stood entranced; he said in a wondering voice: "No wonder Bayles didn't care who read what murder case!"

"And no wonder I went wrong," said Gamadge, "with all these murder cases and trials and summing-ups. The books are just as I—" novels in the book shelves."

Rena asked: "Not a murder case?"

"No. Here you are."

She leaned over to read the item aloud.

The Summing-up of the Tichborne case.

"That was the bound book," Gamadge told her. "The other book, the Tichborne Trial itself, was the case involving a fraudulent claim to an estate. The Claimant lost, and was then tried for perjury; as he never got his hands on any of the estate funds, he couldn't be tried for embezzlement."

"You remember when we talked about forming a company, Rena, to pay for your divorce suit? That rang a bell; the Claimant, in the Tichborne case, Orton, had a bunch of stockholders behind him, backing him with their shillings and half crowns, poor things."

"Another thing might have—ah—rang a bell," said Mr. Dabney, exhilarated by a chance to match Gamadge's historical information. "The main strength of the Claimant's case rested on the astounding fact that the lost heir's own mother recognized and accepted the pretender. Or thought she recognized him, or—Mr. Dabney smiled—"pretended to do so. She didn't like the legal heirs. This fellow Bayles seemed to have family backing too."

"It rang no bell," admitted Gamadge. "What got to me at last was Miss Austen's reference to 'columns and columns,' coupled with her phrase: 'more than you'd expect.' Those little books, and Rena's description, had been in my mind for more than thirty-six hours, and—such is memory."

"I had it all in my hands on Friday afternoon," said Rena.

"We can now analyze the scene that took place on that Friday afternoon," said Gamadge. "We can follow it from beginning to end. The man had had a double shock when he gave you that murderous look; he was half out of his wits with terror when he looked that door. First he saw the report of the Tichborne trial in your hands, caught the title, and knew what it was. It's a very famous case, and has often been referred to and described in memoirs and collections. He may have read about it or only heard about it—but he knew it. At first, obsessed as he was—Jerome said so, you remember—he was sure you'd caught on to him." Gamadge paused. "I half think he may have had an excuse for jumping to that conclusion."

"I never—" began Rena.

"No, but his first wife may have found him out; wouldn't that explain her better than any explanation we thought of before? She couldn't bring herself to leave this man who seems out to be a criminal, and who doesn't even care for her. He must have been a—" potential danger to him, and so do the others treat her. They never let her alone. She's in it with them, too, and she's a simple not very well educated character who can't take it."

"So when I—"

"So he instantly jumps to his conclusion; but you persuade him that he has been wrong. He's calming down; and then what do you say? You say you want to leave him; that he doesn't really need you."

"What can he, in his state, think of that? He can only think that you mean he isn't really lame at all. He rushes out to consult his accomplices, and he looks you in."

"But then Jerome, who has more discernment than Bayles where people are concerned, laughs him out of it. You couldn't possibly carry such a suspicion, much less such knowledge, for a day without showing that you had it. Bayles must go up and let you out and apologize, before you get it into your head that something is very wrong with them all."

"But he finds that you have flown. So now, Jerome tells him the thing is to behave as innocent people behave, but without running any risk of putting ex-Captain Gray Austen into the limelight. Consult a private man, and let him find her if he will—but of course he won't. Not the kind of private man this Gamadge seems to be."

"Very likely," Mr. Dabney agreed, "this young lady will have no difficulty whatsoever obtaining annulment of her so-called marriage."

"And another thing that clinches our case," said Gamadge brightly, "I've talked with Dr. Wolfram. Do you know, he'd never examined Bayles' knee? That, he explained, would be a surgeon's job. Bayles has turned over to Wolfram all X-ray reports and other records which Gray Austen had brought away with him from the military hospital in California. Wolfram merely issued medication, tonics and things to keep Bayles feeling fit."

Turning to Rena, Mr. Dabney asked: "Have you any plans for the future, my dear?"

"Well," she said, and her face flushed slightly, "that nice old lady across the street, Mrs. Orger, Norris' grandmother, you know, has invited me to spend a few weeks with her at their country place. I'm going and I'm taking Abby with me."

"You've met her then?" Gamadge asked.

"No," Rena explained, "not yet, but I'm dining with the Orger family at their home tomorrow. Gram is putting on a quiet party for us."

"The mills of the gods," Gamadge laughed, as if he were ready to leave the Austen house forever.

DOROTHY DIX

Mother At Fault

Dear Miss Dix: I am absolutely desperate. I have tried so hard to raise my family well, yet two of my daughters are giving me a terrible time: they skip school, run around with questionable companions, and come in at all hours. One is such a problem that the court has sent her back to live with my first husband, when she has not seen him in fourteen years. He has remarried, and I'm sure she'll cause enough trouble there to break up the home. As she has mine, I have been married to my second husband for thirteen years, and as aren't happy at all. In fact I'm seriously thinking of divorcing him. I've seen a psychiatrist, and he advises that I leave my family, but I love my three girls still at home and hate to go. I need a little love and understanding.
R. P. R.
Answer: You need a little love and understanding, you say, but has it ever occurred to you that that's exactly what your children have needed and apparently never received? Their lives have been lived in one warring house after another. You have never given them the sort of family that is right fully theirs, so how can you expect final devotion and well-balanced children?
Perhaps your daughter's step-mother can take a firmer grasp on the problem and give the child a better perspective on life. Only a woman of tremendous sympathetic perception can do the job, and both you and your daughter will be very fortunate if the stepmother has it.
You Have Filled Them
You afraid you've rather fallen down on the job of raising your children. While realizing that many divorces are unavoidable, I cannot understand a mother who carries her children into a second marriage with little or no effort to guard against their future. Since you admit that the thirteen years of your second marriage have been unhappy surely there can be little doubt in your mind as to where your children's instability stems from.
Instead of being so resigned to a second divorce, better make a new start and give the younger children a halfway decent chance to lead a normal life. Leaving the family to fend for itself will achieve nothing but to provide a soap to your own neurotic irresponsibility. A psychiatrist might help you, but I couldn't put much confidence in a professional man who would hand out as poor advice as you received. Why not try a family counselor, who will be more interested in keeping your family together than tending it apart?

Dear Miss Dix: Several months ago I met a girl of 25, and from the beginning I liked her. She went on two dates with me, but at the same time I knew she was going out with other boys. She was quite frank about this. Whenever I'd call her, after the second date, she would be too busy to go out, or have some other excuse. I like her so much that I hate to give up.
RICHARD S.
Answer: Circumstances indicate quite conclusively, and regrettably for you, that the girl of your dreams is rather more fond of one of the other boys than of you. You might continue your campaign of conquest for a while longer, at least, but I'm afraid it will be futile. Of course, "Paint heart never won fair lady" — a good quotation as far as it goes, but one not to be overly trusted. You also must know when to retire from battle.

Motives Back of False Tip Sought

SEATTLE (P) — A federal grand jury, working behind closed doors, was due to begin probing today into the motives back of a Seattle's man's false tip on Owen Lattimore. The tip, given to the Central Intelligence Agency and passed on to the State Department, was that Lattimore planned a trip to Russia.
It caused the State Department, Johns Hopkins University professor and Far Eastern expert who has been a target of Sen. McCarthy's (R-Wis.) accusations of Communist influence within the department.
Lattimore has denied any Com-

In our ten months of marriage he has not acquired adult habits. He collects all sorts of things and keeps them around the house — papers, magazines, match covers, books, records, etc. The only thing he doesn't like to save is money! No matter how much I preach to him he won't change. Should I take him to a psychologist?
M. M.
Answer: If you think your husband hasn't grown up, I don't think you have either. You two are so temperamentally unsuited that I don't see how you ever decided to marry. You entered matrimony with a preconceived idea that things would proceed exactly according to your plan; uncluttered house, money spent just as you wanted it to be spent, husband around when convenient but out of the way when his presence would interfere with housekeeping. The fact that hubby wants a home where he can keep the things he wants and be comfortable when he wishes was no part of your program. Well, my dear, either you make it part of your regime or marital disaster is in the offing. He should make some concessions to your passion for orderliness, but the major compromises will have to be yours.
